

Lacey Merced

CIT 140

Professor Stalbert

September 28, 2026

Attention First, Page 72, Prompts 32-3

Prompt 32

For this stakeholder consultation, some helpful tools would be:

1. Stakeholder map – This helps show who is involved, what their role is, what they need, and who actually has decision-making authority.
2. Interview questions – Asking each person questions can help get their point of view and make sure important information is not missed.
3. Meeting notes – Notes can help keep track of what each person said, what still needs to be confirmed, and where people may disagree.
4. Participation or responsibility list – This can help show who is doing the work, who is affected by it, who is giving technical advice, and who can actually approve something.
5. Follow-up checklist – This would help keep track of missing contacts, questions that still need answers, and anything that needs to be confirmed before moving forward.

Prompt 33

Three questions I would ask stakeholders are:

1. What part of this work are you responsible for, and what information do you know that others might not know?
2. How could this review affect your job or the way you normally do your work?
3. What do you think needs to be confirmed or considered before the team moves forward?